The first spraying really necessary after the leaves begin to appear should come just before the blossom buds deen. This apraying is often emitted, but it is very helpful towards checking the development of fungi.

and the mildewing of the grapes. But it must be put on in time.

After this spraying of the steple trees there should be no further spraying till the blossoms have come and gone. Under no circumstances should spraying be done while the trees are in bloom.

There are two strong reasons why no There are two strong reasons why no spraying should be done while the trees are in bloom.

One reason in that it does not pay to one reason is that it does not pay to spray then. This reason alone should appeal to most of us. If any one tries to persuade you to have your apple trees strayed while they are in bloom, remander this—that person is thinking of his own convenience and pocket book and not of your pocket book. To pay for that straying is throwing money away. Another tremendously important teason is that straying while the trees are in bloom is destructive of useful insects. Consider for a moment that we have all too few useful insects, and that the future wars of mankind are to be waged sgainst insects. Burnble-bees and honespees seek the apple blossoms for the nexts in them. This nectar was placed there to attract the bees. Why? Because the bee in getting a wee drop of nectar becomes dusted with nollen and when she visits the next blossom she brushes her pollen-laden hody against the stigma of that blossom. Now it is absolutely essential if an apple is to form from a blossom that pollen he brought in contact with the stigma of that blossom. Nature does this necessary act of fertilization largely through the bees.

It has been noted many times that large.

It has been noted many times that large orchards where bees are few have applies only on the outer trees. Few bees if any setting to the inner trees, the blossoms of the trees deep in the orchard are left sterile. Large apple-growers are well aware of this fact. I know of large growers in New Yersey who pay beekeepers 15 per here for bringing bees into their large orchards. These apple-growers pay out hundreds of dollars annually for the out hundreds of dollars annually for the use of hives of bees just during the blosming season. When the blossoms fall the beekespers remove their bees. In some parts of Massachusetts care-less spraying has killed off nearly all the bees. Three years ago the apraying of a few trees near my home caused me the loss of $200 worth of bees.

Knowing then that to spray apple trees while in bloom helps neither the owner of the trees nor any one else there should be no incentive to spray at that The proper time to spray is just after most of the petals have fallen. At this time the stamens of the blossoms have withered and the petals are out of the way. It is easier now to get the poisonous spray into the blossom end where it is needed.

Will Build An Oasis On The Briny Deep

Beating the Prohibition law is now the great American indoor and outdoor sport, so this picture of Capt. James V. Martin has interest. to pro and anti alike. For Captain Martin has an elaborate plan to circumvent complete aridity. He plans to have built a great floating cabaret, which he will locate just outside the "three-mile limit." The vessel will be operated under foreign registry and a first of seagoing tenders will carry parched throated Americans to the floating casis and back to the desert again
